En presentasjon:

Baashus has been working as a commercial photographer all over the world for many years. Today he has moved more into art. Working for the car industry he made art out of car photography. Over the recent years he has taken a step back from the commercial stuff, and taking on more self-indulged projects.

From the Norwegian nature to the coasts of California he always try to capture the perfect moment. With a background from graphic design, he also shows the ability to make the photos almost to the point of not being a photograph anymore. He has attended a number of exhibitions in several countries.

There is some kind of loneliness in his photographs of landscapes and horizons, which have been a big part of the newest series published.

When you get to sit down with designers like Giugiaro, Bertone, Tom Tjaarda, Pininfarina among others to discuss the lines, light and shadows intended by the designer and then be able to take those objects out on the road, you can be sure the photographs end up with the expression the designers had in mind. And with Rune's twist on all of it, it just becomes a work of art.

"My job is to use my eyes, capture the perfect moment that you probably never will see again. My photographs are almost always composed through the lense. What is important today is perhaps unimportant tomorrow, with my eyes fixed to the camera – I try to capture the meaning of the past."
